We Are Grateful

Thank you for your generous support of the Rhode Island Community Food Bank during the past year. We are pleased to share our 2019 Annual Report to demonstrate how your generosity has helped feed our neighbors in need.

For the first time in five years, the Rhode Island Community Food Bank conducted a survey to gain a better understanding about the people served at food pantries and meal sites throughout the state. This information, collected in collaboration with the Hassenfeld Child Health Innovation Institute at Brown University, is critical to identifying who is hungry and what needs to be done to end food insecurity in our state.

The results of the Hunger Survey show that, even with a strong economy, thousands of Rhode Islanders are struggling to have three healthy meals each day. What's even more concerning is that the majority of households seeking assistance include members of the most vulnerable populations, children and seniors.

In this annual report, we provide a glimpse into the faces of hunger in Rhode Island with quotes from people receiving help at our member agencies, representing a wide range of backgrounds and life experiences. And we are happy to share the words of a selection of donors without whom none of this work would be possible.

We're especially thankful to the individuals and organizations listed inside who last year enabled us to distribute 11.6 million pounds of food and serve 53,000 people each month. Like you, they are part of a caring family doing everything they can to ensure no one goes hungry.

We thank you for your generosity and hope you will continue to support us in our mission.

RHODE ISLAND COMMUNITY
FOOD BANK

OUR MISSION

To improve the quality of life for all Rhode Islanders by advancing solutions to the problem of hunger.

OUR VISION

We envision a state where no one goes hungry.

The Food Bank at Work

The Rhode Island Community Food Bank distributed more than 11.6 million pounds of food last year. Food is acquired through a variety of sources and distributed through a network of 168 member agencies located throughout the state from Westerly to Woonsocket.

Each month, 53,000 guests visit food pantries for food assistance. They come from a variety of backgrounds and circumstances but all need help putting food on the table. At most of our member agencies, they “shop” for food choosing the items that best suit their family’s needs.

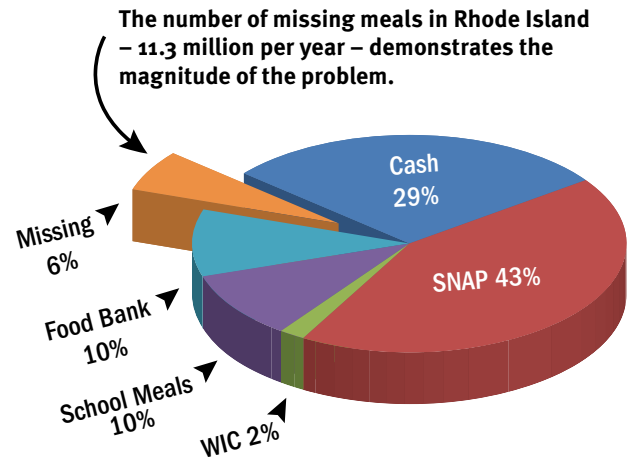

At pantries, guests can find everything from canned and boxed non-perishable items to fresh produce and bagged meals. Much of the food is donated by food businesses like retailers, wholesalers, manufacturers and growers.

Even with these generous partners, not enough food is donated to meet the need in the community. The Food Bank must purchase 23% of the food we distribute with funds raised from our caring donors which include individuals, companies and organizations. These funds are also critical to cover other expenses like the storage and transportation of all of this food.

Hunger is a Health Issue

One of the advantages of purchasing food, is that the Food Bank can choose the healthiest, most nutritious items to meet the needs of vulnerable populations like seniors and children.

At community farms like Franklin Farm in Cumberland, volunteers grow thousands of pounds of fresh produce for the Food Bank and its member agencies.

Sources of Meals for Low-Income Rhode Islanders

Forty-five percent of guests visiting food pantries and meal sites indicate that they are in poor or fair health (as opposed to good health). Many of them suffer from conditions like diabetes and high blood pressure at rates much higher than the general population.

To help address this issue, the Food Bank distributed 2.3 million pounds of fresh produce last year. Eighty-eight percent of the food distributed is considered “core food”- healthy foods, including vegetables and fruits, bread, grains, protein, beans and dairy, which can be used to prepare a nutritious meal for a family.

Food Bank Programs

The Rhode Island Community Food Bank has developed a number of programs to help strengthen the community by providing education, training and other critical resources.

communitykitchen CULINARY JOB TRAINING PROGRAM

The Community Kitchen program at the Rhode Island Community Food Bank prepares low-income and unemployed adults for jobs in the food industry. The program has been helping to build and strengthen the state's workforce for more than 21 years.

The fourteen-week immersive program is free for qualified candidates and covers a wide range of culinary topics including food handling and safety. In addition, participants are taught life skills like resume writing, job interviewing and even personal financial management.

Two professional chefs lead the program, along with a life skills coordinator.

As part of their training students prepare healthy, nutritious meals that are distributed to children participating in afterschool programs at our Kids Cafe sites.

Up to thirteen students are enrolled in each session where they receive instruction in both the classroom and the industrial kitchen at the Food Bank. They are also placed at on-the-job training sites where they can practice their skills in a real-world setting.

Once they're finished, graduates leave the program with the tools to be successful in work and life. Upon graduation, 73% of students secure full-time employment in the food industry. Many of them return to the Community Kitchen as volunteers or to demonstrate their cooking skills to a new class.

“Community Kitchen is the best decision that I made for myself. It’s put me back into the community. I’m part of society again. That’s my dream. It’s everything I thought it would be.”

Cheryl is a married mother of four with six grandchildren who is recovering from addiction. She joined the program after a friend recommended it to her and is now putting her skills to work in Dining Services at Providence College.

On-the-Job Training Sites

To gain practical experience in the workplace, each Community Kitchen Student is placed at a local food business where they put their skills to work. We're fortunate to have so many great partners willing to host our students.

More Food Bank Programs

Healthy Habits: Eating Well on a Budget

Healthy Habits is a nutrition education program designed to help guests of member agencies create healthier meals on a tight budget, with a focus on balance, moderation and variety.

Classes and workshops are held at food pantries and meal sites, bringing education directly to the people who need it most. Our trained staff focus on four key areas: nutrition, healthy cooking, food safety and food budgeting.

Last year, more than 2,581 people participated in Healthy Habits activities.

In addition to offering learning experiences for guests, the Food Bank also trains staff and volunteers at our member agencies, so they can extend these opportunities to more people.

Kids Cafe Afterschool Meals

The Food Bank's Kids Cafe serves healthy late afternoon meals to children at risk of hunger and provides nutrition education as part of their afterschool programs. Meals are prepared daily by the students in the Food Bank's Community Kitchen culinary job training program. 11,700 meals were served last year.

Meals4Kids Boxes

During vacation and holiday breaks, families with children who normally receive free and reduced-price breakfast and lunch at school are forced to find other resources for their meals. Meals4Kids boxes provide children with a week's worth of breakfasts, lunches and snacks that will help them get through a vacation or transitional period. Boxes are distributed through community health centers and food pantries and include information on other community resources. Nearly 12,000 boxes were given to kids last year, sponsored by Stop & Shop, Price Rite and the Joy in Childhood Foundation.

School-Based Programs

The Food Bank currently supports eleven food pantries and other programs located throughout the state at local schools. The sites serve more than 1,100 young people each month, delivering healthy, nutritious food and snacks that students can eat at school or at home. School-based pantries are located on campus to provide an easily accessible source of food assistance to low-income students and, in many cases, their families.

Senior Boxes

As part of the federal Commodity Supplemental Food Program (CSFP), qualified seniors receive a box of nutritious food that provides them with basic staples to add to their monthly food supply. The boxes are distributed through food pantries, senior centers and senior housing developments. Currently, 1,594 seniors are enrolled in the program receiving more than 19,000 boxes during the past year.

Samuel, a retired taxi driver, regularly visits a pantry in Providence for food assistance.

“A year ago, when I retired, I couldn’t afford the cost of food. I don’t have a car. I take the bus or ride with friends. If I take the bus, it’s 15 minutes or maybe half hour, I have to leave the bus at Kennedy Plaza and walk here. What they give, meat, pasta, rice, fruits, beans... it’s good.”

Samuel is a retired taxi driver who lives in Providence. Through retirement and Social Security, he earns $800 per month which needs to cover all of the expenses that he and his wife incur. Once a month, he visits the food pantry at the First Unitarian Church on Benefit Street to help stock his shelves.

Mark Ross, honorary Food Bank Board member and retired vice president, Ross-Simons Jewelers.

Mark and his wife, Donna are committed supporters to the Food Bank.

"We started supporting the Food Bank in the early 90s when it was at the West Warwick location. We would help by sorting items as well as donating. We continue to support the Food Bank because of its great work in helping to alleviate food insecurity among our fellow citizens by providing healthy food to member agencies to distribute. Giving back always gives us a good feeling."

Jonathan and Ruth Fain, long-time philanthropists and Food Bank donors.

Jonathan is Chairman and CEO of Teknor Apex Company, a Pawtucket-based firm specializing in the production of advanced polymer materials.

“Hunger is impacting the lives of many Rhode Islanders, both adults and children, forcing decisions of not only what to eat but whether to eat or spend funds on other basic needs. The Food Bank is the state’s best mechanism for helping those who are food insecure and they have the knowledge, skills and ability to provide food in the most economically efficient means. Supporting the Food Bank means that our contributions help the hungry in the most effective way. It is important to us to help provide for those in our community who are unable to make ends meet. We support the Food Bank to ensure that food, our most basic human need, is available to those who are faced with hunger.”

A team from Webster Bank delivered a check to support the Community Kitchen program.

“At Webster, we bring our non-profits to the table and have an honest conversation about their needs. We want to be involved in a meaningful way. With the passage of the new federal tax reform legislation in 2018, Webster announced an increase in our investments into the communities we serve. As a result, we created the Food Security Initiative giving us the opportunity to invest and give back. Our focus on basic needs with a dedication to making sure no one goes hungry was at the forefront of this funding.”

Kathryn Luria, Senior Vice President, Community Affairs, and Director of Philanthropy at Webster Bank.

Webster Bank's Food Security Initiative: Feeding Our Regional Food Banks. With a focus on summer food security, Webster's new program provided grants to Feeding America Regional Food Banks across the bank's footprint including CT, RI, MA, NY and beyond. Funding includes grants for job training initiatives, and backpack programs to secure food for children who were without access to free lunch programs during summer vacation.

“I can’t come as often as I need but this helps me out. A lot. It’s a really good place, really nice, especially when you can’t afford groceries.”

Sandra used to work in security, and in a nursing home. She’s no longer working as she suffers from kidney disease and needs dialysis three times a week. She lives with her son, 28 who is disabled and visits the North Kingstown Food Pantry at least once a month for help with food.

“We see more people who are working, two-parent households that have jobs. They’re having to make choices between bills and food. Transportation is really difficult for people, it’s hard to get places.”

Sherry Diaz, Social Service Coordinator at the Comprehensive Community Action Program in Cranston.

Paul O'Reilly, CEO of Newport Harbor Corporation, an employee-owned hospitality company, that operates Newport Restaurant Group, a company that gives back regularly to the Food Bank.

"We believe in giving. We are fortunate to be able to create memorable experiences for our guests, through thoughtfully crafted meals. But there are many in our community where food and nutritional insecurity is an everyday struggle. Born from our employee-owner's desire to support the greater good, the Newport Restaurant Group proudly supports the Rhode Island Community Food Bank and other area non-profits committed to building a sustainable and local food supply for those in need."

Despite the improving economy, many Rhode Islanders still need help putting food on the table and visit local pantries like St. Raymond's in Providence for assistance.

"I know being in this situation, even if folks have jobs, they need help. Doing this is something I can do to help. They don't have the paying jobs they need, you can't live on $10-$12 an hour any more. So what we do really needs to be done."

Tony is a volunteer and a former President of the food pantry at St. Mary's of the Bay in Warren. He first started helping 25 years ago when he was out of work with an injured hand and he hasn't stopped since.
